Marseille Privatopia | Gated Communities

I. Project description

The project consists of an art and science exhibition including painting, installation, photo-video, mapping, conferences and urban walks.

Since 2014, artist Anke Doberauer and researcher Elisabeth Dorier have been exploring the urban fabric of Marseille together, focusing on the banalization of gated communities within the city. The joint art - science project began with urban walks, during which they found it impossible to pass through certain neighbourhoods. It was awarded a residency from the Camargo Foundation, Cassis in 2014.

The global phenomenon of gated communities was first studied in the USA, Latin American countries or South Africa. It is clearly on the rise in Europe. In Marseille, it attains an exceptional intensity. Despite its integrative and cosmopolitan vocation, the Phocian city multiplies fractures and becomes a universe of enclosures.

Elisabeth Dorier is Professor of Geography at Aix Marseille University (LPED). She is a specialist in comparative studies of urban development, with a "global South" perspective (Dorier, 2018). With a university team, she has conducted empirical observations on this phenomenon in Marseille since 2007. The 2 surveys include all units of more than ten dwellings with open common areas, but restricted access by walls and fences. It is the only complete cartographic survey on this topic in a major European city.

II. Policy of urban enclosure

Nearly 1/3 of the dwellings of Marseille are located in gated communities and up to 80% in some southern neighbourhoods. These enclosures concern more than 50% of the urbanized area in some districts. Of the 1550 closures, 75% occurred after the year 2000. These large intra-urban proportions and the recent and rapid spread of enclaves are linked to liberal policies that have sparsely regulated urbanization. The evolution is analysed in relation to global trends of living in the "neoliberal city" as well as its local historical depth (doctoral thesis of Julien Dario directed by E.Dorier, 2019). The scientific questions concern the concrete processes, the landmarks of this urban fragmentation, the questioning of public space, the transformation of the forms of social cohabitation in the town. Their studies show that the "city of condominiums" is at the heart of major urban problems: inequality, difficulties of governance, a decline in historic urban centers, a reduction of public space and the exclusion of "the other". The archipelago of fences creates detours, reduces walking and increases car use and its ecological impacts. What will remain of the urban character in this Mediterranean "privatopia", when each group of homeowners will separately manage her/his own space?

III. Artistic approach

Anke Doberauer is an internationally renowned visual artist and has lived in Marseille since 1992. She is appointed professor of painting at the Academy of Fine Arts in Munich in 2003. In Marseille, her artistic approach has evolved towards an increased sensitivity to urban issues. Since her arrival in France she has been working on Marseille's urbanity, focusing on seaside landscapes, the "village" atmosphere of some districts, social diversity and the concept of "living together" in public spaces, represented in her works Marseille 360° (1998), Sunset (2006) or The Bathers (2009).

For this project, solicited by the social sciences, she deepens the approach to fragmentation by an artistic and sensitive point of view. She visited a selection of gated communities previously investigated by the researchers. On the motif, in situ, she paints the haunting omnipresence of doors and fences as well as the common areas such as gardens or courtyards, which tend to supplant the notion of public space in the neoliberal urban model. Painting being a long process, the project has so far required five years of work. The immersion was slow and gave her time to get to know and feel the spirit of the place. The result is not a documentation, but an atmospheric rendering. The modest size of the paintings is due to the fact that they had to be completed in a limited time, usually one day, and had to be transportable by bicycle or public transport. Panoramas are made up of assemblies of several canvases painted on several days. The notion of time can be read in the differences in luminosity from one painting to another. This cycle of conceptually based figurative paintings is complemented by photographic documentation of the work in situ.

Some of the panoramic views of the sea that inspired the artist are about to be privatized. The work highlights the contrast between the peacefulness and beauty of the landscapes and the austerity of the gates and walls that limit access. Many panoramas lose their accessibility here by becoming one of the components of real estate valuation. Marseille is the one French metropolis where the extent of intramural public green spaces is the most limited, but with vast areas of private gardens. The gardens of the gated communities, with their decrepit "romantic" ruins and surrounding walls, bear witness to the heritage of the private allotment of the bastides. Many gated communities are pastiches of the bastides or of mediterranean villages. They thus constitute selective reserves of "environmental quality" or residential tranquility in a city with unequal living conditions.

Doberauer refers here to the iconographic theme of the enclosed garden, the Hortus Conclusus of European religious art since the Middle Ages. It is the symbolic place of redemption, where the soul already participates in divine life. The gated community is thus directly associated with the earthly paradise, which gives an ambiguous metaphysical dimension to the artistic project.

IV. Installation

The panoramas and other series of paintings will be presented in a precise and apparently simple scenographic installation, the aim of which is to create a relationship with the spectator's space and body, and to intensify the specific atmosphere of the paintings. This can be achieved by their arrangement in space, the colours of walls, floor or ceiling, by wallpapers, by lightning, but other solutions are possible. Maps and explaining texts as well as photos and video projections (documentary film by M.N. Battaglia) will be integrated in the presentation, depending on the nature and dimensions of the exhibition space.

V. Project objectives

Anke Doberauer's artistic project is based on the research of Elisabeth Dorier and her team on the fragmentation of Marseille, considered as a paradigm of a global urban evolution in the 21st century. For the researchers, involving the artist permits to enrich the scientific data by another sensibility, more subjective, nourished by art historical references on landscape painting. The exhibition makes visible and palpable the abstraction of urban statistics, analysis, maps, and monographs of territories. The common approach aims to make seen and felt the atmosphere of urban enclosure, both from inside and outside, because it impacts the daily life of each inhabitant, without him necessarily being aware of it. The exhibition aims to open up the subject to a wider public interested in urban transformation and its social dynamics. The causes and consequences of the phenomenon of gated communities are part of a broader context of urban geohistory and local urban planning policy choices, explaining the division of public space and communities within the city. These choices deserve to be continually reviewed from a critical perspective. This art-science project resonates with many artistic initiatives undertaken in Marseille, which seek to stimulate civic participation in urban planning issues.

VI. Project partners

The Laboratoire Population-Environnement-Développement (LPED) is a joint French interdisciplinary research unit, under the supervision of the University of Aix-Marseille (AMU) and the Institut de Recherche pour le Développement (IRD). It addresses the interrelationships between social and environmental dynamics and the issues of "sustainable development".

The Goethe-Institute is the cultural institution of the Federal Republic of Germany with a global reach. It promotes international cultural cooperation while providing information about cultural, social and political life in Germany and Europe. Its cultural and educational programs encourage intercultural dialogue and strengthen the development of structures in civil society and foster worldwide mobility.
